Opportunity for Prevocational Trainees to contribute to the work of the Australian Medical Council

The Australian Medical Council (AMC) is an independent national standards body for medical education and training whose purpose is to ensure that standards of education, training and assessment of the medical profession promote and protect the health of the Australian community.

The AMC is seeking a person who has, or has recently been, a prevocational trainee working primarily at an Australian hospital to appoint as a Member of Council.

The term of appointment will be for two years, commencing at the conclusion of the AMC's Annual General Meeting on 20 November 2020.

Members need to commit at least three full days per year to prepare for and attend the June and November meetings of Council. Members will collaborate with a wide range of Council Members from the medical profession, health consumers and community members and also have the opportunity to serve on AMC committees, expert groups and panels covering a range of business areas across the AMC.

The AMC is committed to ensuring a range of skill sets and diversity in membership, from different geographical locations, to different levels of academic or clinical experience or expertise.

The AMC advocates for healthier outcomes for Aboriginal, Torres Strait Islander people and Māori and privileging Indigenous voices. Applications from Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and Māori are encouraged.

An AMC Selection Panel will review all applications with shortlisted candidates invited to participate in an interview.

The AMC is a Company Limited by Guarantee and a registered charity. It is subject to the Corporations Act, Australian Charities and Not-for-Profits Commission Act, and operates in accordance with its Constitution.

Diversity and inclusion is essential to the AMC's continued success.

The AMC values diversity of thought and experience and believes that an inclusive and collaborative culture underpins the accreditation and assessment of medical education.

We celebrate and promote diversity as a key strength of our organisation.
